

September 9, 2010

The Spotlight on Boards

Current focus on the performance of corporate boards prompts revisiting what is expected from the board of directors of a major public company – not just the legal rules, but also the aspirational “best practices” that have come to have almost as much influence on board and company behavior.

Boards are expected to:

- Choose the CEO, monitor his or her performance and have a detailed succession plan in case the CEO becomes unavailable or fails to meet performance expectations.
- Plan for and deal with crises, specially crises like HP where the tenure of the CEO is in question, BP where there has been a major disaster or J&J and Toyota where hard-earned reputation is threatened by product failure.
- Determine executive compensation, achieving the delicate balance of enabling the company to recruit, retain and incentivize the most talented executives, while avoiding media and populist criticism for “excessive” compensation.
- Interview and nominate director candidates, monitor and evaluate the board’s own performance and seek continuous improvement in board performance.
- Provide business and strategic advice to management and approve the company’s budgets and long-term strategy.
- Determine the company’s risk appetite (financial, safety, reputation, etc.), set state-of-the-art standards for managing risk and monitor the management of those risks.
- Monitor the performance of the corporation and evaluate it against the economy as a whole and the performance of peer companies.
- Set state-of-the-art standards for compliance with legal and regulatory requirements, monitor compliance and respond appropriately to “red flags.”
- Take center stage whenever there is a proposed transaction that creates a seeming conflict between the best interests of stockholders and those of management, including takeovers.
- Set the standards of social responsibility of the company, including human rights, and monitor performance and compliance with those standards.

If your address changes or if you do not wish to continue receiving these memos, please send an e-mail to Publications@wlrk.com or call 212-403-1443.

- Oversee government and community relations.
- Pay close attention to investor relations and interface with shareholders in appropriate situations.
- Adopt corporate governance guidelines and committee charters.

To meet these expectations, it will be necessary for major companies to have a sufficient number of directors to staff the requisite standing and special committees; to have directors who have knowledge of, and experience with, the company's businesses, even though meeting this requirement may result in boards with a greater percentage of directors who are not "independent"; to have directors who are able to devote sufficient time to board and committee meetings, and the preparation for them; to provide regular tutorials by internal and external experts as part of expanded director education; and to maintain a true collegial relationship among and between the company's senior executives and the members of the board.

Martin Lipton